Election day bidders secure a solid buy

DRIVING past, you could be excused for thinking 64 Gloucester Road, Buderim, was a polling booth.

Flags were flying, signs were up, cars were parked all along the road and marketing agents Sue Custance of Amber Werchon Property and Judy Wild of Ray White Buderim were busy taking the names of the 50 to 60 people in attendance as well as handing out cards ... in this case, bidding registration cards.

Ray White auctioneer Justin Voss kept his nerve in between showers, ultimately holding the auction in bright sunshine in the driveway of the home.

Bidding got off to a start at $450,000 and continued in 20s with three bidders, coming down to two in the end.

"It will sell today," Justin confidently said when bidding reached 460 .. and it did, at $462,500.

It was a great result, allowing the vendor to downsize to a Buderim apartment.

Brick, big and beaut, the top-of-Buderim home on 1012sq m was always going to sell.

"When people come out of the woodwork in droves to an open house a week before auction, one can only assume the property will be a great attraction on auction day," according to joint marketing agents Sue Custance and Judy Wild.

It was a nice touch seeing the seller and vendors enjoying a champers together after the auction and no doubt it is a huge relief for the happy seller who can now concentrate on moving on to another property at Buderim, a double whammy for agent Sue.

FOUR BIDDING PARTIES: Flags, signs, cars, a crowd and agents handing out cards: 64 Gloucester Road, Buderim, looked like a polling booth. With bidding from $450,000, Ray White auctioneer Justin Voss finally declared the three-bedroom home sold for $462,500.
